Cooling the City

Practice text written for this worksheet. All people named are fictional.

A On a still summer afternoon, the centre of a large city can be several degrees warmer than the farmland around it. This effect, known as the urban heat island, is caused less by the sun itself than by what cities are made of. Asphalt, brick and concrete absorb heat during the day and release it slowly at night, so streets that feel bearable at noon can remain uncomfortable well after midnight.

B For many years the standard response was simply more air conditioning. Yet air-conditioning units pump warm air back into the street, and the electricity they use often comes from power stations that add to the problem. Urban climatologist Dr Ines Varga describes this as "cooling the inside by heating the outside" and argues that it can only ever be a short-term measure.

C Planners have therefore turned to passive solutions. The simplest is paint: roofs coated in pale, reflective material stay markedly cooler than dark ones. Street trees are more expensive to maintain, but they provide shade as well as cooling through evaporation from their leaves. According to landscape architect Tomás Reyes, a single mature tree can do more for a pavement than any new technology, "provided someone remembers to water it in its first three summers".

D Green roofs, covered in soil and low-growing plants, have attracted the most attention. They insulate the buildings beneath them and absorb rainwater that would otherwise overload drains. However, they are heavy, and older buildings may need structural work before one can be installed. Building engineer Priya Nair points out that the cost of this work is rarely included in the optimistic figures quoted by suppliers.

E None of these measures is a complete answer on its own. Researchers increasingly speak of a "cooling network": parks, tree-lined streets and reflective surfaces linked so that cool air can move through a neighbourhood. Whether cities have the patience to build such networks, which take decades rather than years to mature, remains an open question.

TRUE if the statement agrees with the information

3 Reflective roof paint is now required by law in several cities. — NOT GIVEN

4 Street trees cost more to look after than reflective roofs. — TRUE

5 Residents generally prefer green roofs to street trees. — NOT GIVEN

PEOPLE

A Dr Ines Varga, urban climatologist
B Tomás Reyes, landscape architect

3 Note completion

IELTS Listening · Questions 9–14

Your teacher will read a short talk once. Complete the notes. Write ONE WORD AND/OR A NUMBER for each answer.

■ AUDIO SCRIPT, READ ONCE AT NATURAL SPEED Hello, and welcome to Riverside Community Garden. I'm Josie Marsh, that's M-A-R-S-H, and I look after the volunteers. Please don't wait at the main gate: we meet at the greenhouse, right next to the car park. Sessions run every Saturday from half past nine. We used to finish at twelve, but we now carry on until twelve thirty. You don't need tools, we have plenty, but do bring gloves, and in summer a hat, because there's very little shade. For your first few weeks you'll mostly be weeding and watering the vegetable beds; pruning comes later, after some training. Teenagers are very welcome, but anyone under sixteen needs to come with an adult.

Sleep researchers have long known that memory is not simply recorded during the day and stored at night. Instead, the sleeping brain appears to 15 consolidate recent experiences, strengthening some connections and allowing others to fade. This process is not 16 random: information linked to a reward, or that the learner expected to need later, is more likely to be retained. The 17 implications for students are considerable. Revising late into the night may feel productive, but if it 18 reduces the total amount of sleep, it can undermine the very learning it was meant to 19 reinforce.

7 Plan before you write

Plan Position: partly agree: community work is valuable, but making it compulsory weakens it.
Body 1: P: volunteering builds skills school does not teach. Ex: teamwork with adults, responsibility to real people. Eg: a teenager running a food-bank shift learns scheduling and patience.
Body 2: P: compulsion turns service into a box-ticking exercise. Ex: motivation drops when choice disappears. Eg: required hours often become the minimum, done without interest.
Conclusion: schools should reward and promote community work rather than require it.
